IN WAR EFFORT

Thousands of Trained Members of Radio Manufacturers Service Engage in War Work

RMS in wartime is helping the Armed Forces of our Country to handle the tremendous radio job in typical American fashion, just as in peacetime RMS helps the radio industry to handle its great job of installation and service.

ARMY

Shortly after the United States entered the War, Philco sent a mailing to RMS members which helped the Army immeasurably in quickly locating trained radio men and placing them where they could do the most good — in radio.

AIR FORCES

A later mailing from Philco to RMS members resulted in thousands of men sending in to the Army and Navy their qualifications for radio work with the Armed Services. Most of these men are now in action, either in uniform, or in a civilian capacity — but definitely in radio work.

NAVY

As a result of this fine cooperation and a realization of the splendid qualifications of RMS members, the War Department officially approved RMS membership for direct enlistment in the Signal Corps. Previously it had been necessary for a man to have an amateur or commercial operator's license in order to enlist directly for Signal Corps work.

CIVILIAN

When and if further personnel demands are made on the world's largest radio service organization, Radio Manufacturers Service can be depended upon to come through in its usual grand style.
